Marshall Stresses Urgency of Greek Aid

Navy to Help In Location Of Hospital Center Here

Observatory Site Supported; Tydings Ready to Sponsor Needed Legislation

By Gerald G. Gross

Undersecretary John L. Sullivan yesterday told The Post that the Navy Department is cooperating in plans to locate the Capital's new hospital center on a portion of the Naval Observatory reservation. His statement, coupled with a pledge by Senator Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) to sponsor any necessary land-transfer legislation, made it probable that the proposed center will be erected on the present site of the Industrial Home School.

Barring unforeseen obstruction, the months-old quest of a location for the $5 million dollar hospital is over. Adoption of the present plan means that no taxable land would be required, a point that should meet with favor among District authorities.

Combines Three Hospitals The Hospital Center Act, which was sponsored by Senator Tydings, would bring together Emergency, Garfield and Episcopal Hospitals in a single center. Congress has appropriated $5 million dollars for the center project.

Undersecretary Sullivan informed The Post that he has had informal talks with members of the committee seeking a site. Head of the committee is J. E. Reynolds, Commissioner of Public Buildings, Federal Works Agency. Naming no names, Sullivan said that the people to whom he talked expressed a desire to build the center at Wisconsin ave. and Calvert st. The site comprises the area upon which the Industrial Home School buildings stand, extending eastward to the Naval Observatory property.

Rear Admiral John J. Manning, Chief of the Navy Bureau of Yards and Docks, estimated that only about 10 or 12 of the Observatory's 72 acres were involved in this project.

Navy Considers Moving "We told the hospital planners," said Sullivan, "that the Navy will not object to transfer of this strip. In other words, we won't be the dog in the manger if the land is needed for a purpose such as this."

He and Admiral Manning disclosed that within recent weeks the Navy Department has been seriously considering the feasibility of moving the Naval Observatory, quite irrespective of the hospital project.

When the Observatory began functioning in its present home in 1893, that section of the Capital was practically suburban. In recent years, however, the area has become so highly developed that smoke, haze, artificial illumination and other encroachments interfere.

Milwaukee Quake Rattles Windows And Townspeople

Milwaukee, May 6 (U.P.)—A sharp earthquake shook Milwaukee and a section of southern Wisconsin along Lake Michigan late today but no serious damage was reported. The tremor rattled windows like a far-off explosion. Townspeople in Milwaukee jammed telephone lines, attempting to call the police and fire departments and newspaper offices.

The quake also shook Waukegan, 20 miles to the west, and was felt in Sheboygan, 35 miles north of here.

The Schroeder Hotel, a 24-story building in downtown Milwaukee, was shaken. The tremor was most strongly felt on the sixth floor. A large telephone switchboard away in the quake.

"I felt like someone shoved me," the operator said. Dishes and glassware in homes toppled off shelves.

Progress Made In Phone Strike

Government conciliators said last night that "only an eyelash separates" the Bell System's long lines department and striking telephone workers from settling their 30-day-old dispute.

Turned Backs on 'Communist' Speech

Delegate Asks For Hearings In Oyster Row

Maryland-Virginia Joint Commission To Continue Study

Baltimore, May 6 (U.P.)—The Potomac River oyster dispute got another going-over today, with a recommendation for public hearings on the controversial question being advanced by one of the delegates to conference of Maryland and Virginia officials.

The recommendation was made by State Senator C. O'Connor, Goodrick of Fredericksburg, Va., at the initial gathering of the Maryland-Virginia joint commission studying the question.

Goodrick suggested that two days be allotted to public testimony, with one day of hearing in each State.

Continue Today During the meeting, which will continue tomorrow, Chairman Edwin Warfield, Jr., of the Maryland Tidewater Fisheries Commission defended the Free State's prohibition of oyster dredging in the Potomac.

He told the delegates that fishermen would be "surprised" how rapidly the oyster beds would be depleted by dredging.

In answer to a question by Goodrick, Warfield stated that the light 36-inch dredges permitted in some Virginia waters deplete the beds as effectively as heavier equipment.

He declared that in Chesapeake Bay, where dredging is permitted by Maryland, the oyster reserves have dwindled to such a point that only 48 boats are still fishing in Maryland waters.

Warfield said that oyster conservation could best be served by a single policing authority independent of the two State commissions. He stated that he made this recommendation as a conservationist and that he could not vouch for its political feasibility.

A bigger, faster, more luxurious, "Sacred Cow" will be delivered to President Truman in mid-summer in time for him to fly to Alaska and the Pacific Northwest.

Probable July delivery of the new DC-4 Douglas plane, with 100 miles more speed per hour than the present Sacred Cow, was disclosed yesterday along with Mr. Truman's tentative land and air travel plans for the summer.

Four Students Stage Protest On Soviet Talk

By Donald Andrews

Your Western High School students yesterday walked out of an assembly in protest against what they believed to be an unfair comparison between Russia and the United States.

The students, three girls and a boy, are all seniors at the school. Their spokesman, 17-year-old Virginia Lanham of 4522 Lowell st. nw., said late yesterday that they believed they had "proved" what they wanted to prove "by their demonstration, and would return to their classes today."

Miss Lanham explained that the protest of the four students was not directed against the school, but solely against what she termed a "communist" speech made yesterday morning by Mrs. Aleksandra P. Lewis, Russian-born wife of a former diplomatic clerk, who is now a student at George Washington University.

Unfavorable Comparison Miss Lanham told reporters that the point at which she and the others students left the assembly came when Mrs. Lewis was saying that everything in Russia was free—schools, even having babies, while it costs money to go to schools or to have babies in the United States.

The four students who walked out were Miss Lanham, Virginia Marackie, 17, 3700 Huntington st. nw.; Ruth Pigott, 18, 2126 N. st. nw., and Dick Smith, 18, 2205 Russell rd., Alexandria.

Nathaniel A. Danowsky, principal of Western High School, said that Mrs. Lewis had "contrasted the American system by implication unfavorably with the Russian system."

Danowsky told reporters yesterday that he had invited Mrs. Lewis to give the talk.

5 Ex-Officers Testify May Aided Garsons

See They Get Nice, Big Order, Witness Says He Was Told

By Dillard Stokes

Five former officers yesterday accused Andrew Jackson May of putting heat on the Army, to get business for the Garsons, who are on trial with him for bribery and conspiracy.

Henry B. Sheets, a former colonel, said Congressmen May told him:

"You know how these things are done, colonel. I want you to see that they—the Garsons—get a nice big order."

May and the Garsons brothers, Henry and Murray, squirmed while the prosecution witnesses told the District Court jury of the pressure May put on the War Department.

Conspiracy Is Charged With May's help, the Garsons ran a letterhead into 17 companies which got over 78 million dollars worth of war orders. The Government claims the Garsons and the fourth man on trial, their contact man here, Joseph P. Freeman, conspired with May to pay him some $50,000 for his efforts.

During the past two weeks, Government witnesses have traced thousands of dollars of Garson money to May's bank account, and to his pockets. Other thousands have been traced to the Cumberland.

Kesselring Must Face Firing Squad for Italian Massacres

Venice, May 6 (U.P.)—Field Marshal Albert Kesselring, who masterminded the stubborn German retreat up the Italian peninsula in 1944, was sentenced by a British military court today to die before a firing squad for war crimes against the Italian people.

The balding, 60-year-old Kesselring flushed and appeared almost to buckle into his seat, when sentence was read.

Dr. Hans Latenser, Kesselring's lawyer, said he would "appeal personally against the sentence."

Both the conviction and the sentence were subject to review by Lieut. Gen. Sir John Harding, commander of British Central Mediterranean forces.

The former German supreme commander in Italy was adjudged responsible for the Ardeatine Caves massacre in which 335 Italians were slaughtered in reprisal for the killing of 32 Germans; and guilty of inciting his troops to excesses which led to the killing of 1078 other Italian civilians, including children.

French Wait For Decision On Ramadier

Socialists Debate Fate of Cabinet Premier Purged Of Communists

Paris, May 6 (U.P.)—The French Socialist Party debated the fate of the Communist-free cabinet of Socialist Paul Ramadier behind closed doors tonight with the likelihood that its decision would have far-reaching influence on the political future not only of France but also of western Europe.

As the national council of 400 delegates met to decide whether to ratify or overrule the week-end decision of their party chiefs to drop Communists from the cabinet, the conservative newspaper Le Monde commented that if the Socialists "capitulate before the Communists it will be their own end, and we will have in France two opposing blocs like those already opposed to one another in the world."

The newspaper, Paris Presse, said the party council was a travesty on parliamentary government inasmuch as a political party should be called to pronounce on a decision taken by the National Assembly which voted confidence in Ramadier while knowing his intention to revoke the Communist portfolios.

High Socialist sources predicted the council would approve Ramadier's action, but only after a struggle between the left-wing Socialists and more moderate elements.

The Socialist federation of the Seine department, which includes Paris and suburbs, already had gone on record condemning Ramadier's course and demanding his resignation.

The Socialists were expected to debate long into the night and perhaps until tomorrow morning.

D'Alesandro Wins Election as Mayor In Baltimore Vote

Baltimore, May 6 (U.P.)—Representative Thomas D. Alesandro, (D., Md.) serving his fifth term in the House of Representatives, won election as Mayor of Baltimore today as the Democratic party ticket swept into office in municipal balloting.

Returns from all of the city's 473 polling places gave the 45-year-old dean of Maryland's congressional delegation a total of 95,333 votes to 71,843 for Dealey K. Nice, the Republican mayoral nominee and nephew of the late Governor Harry Nice.

C. Maryland Kelly, Democratic nominee for city council president, had an unofficial total of 103,949. Far ahead of J. Edward Adkins, Jr., his Republican opponent, who had 48,070.

J. Neil McCordell, Democrat, had 102,424 votes compared with the 48,156 credited to Republican William J. Laukaitis in the contest for city comptroller.

Incomplete, unofficial returns also indicated that a Democratic city council majority would be realized.

The office of mayor will be vacated May 20 by Republican Theodore R. McKeldin, who did not seek another four-year term.

Hungry Man Finds No Dinner, No Wife—So He Cusses

It was enough to make a man cuss, John A. Butts, 46, told Municipal Court Judge Nadine Gallagher yesterday.

He came home from work at 7 p. m. all set for a good dinner only to find:

1. The door locked.
2. No dinner.
3. His wife out.

Butts said he didn't find his wife until 1:30 a. m. and that was when the "cussin' and swearin'" started.

Judge Gallagher suspended a $5 fine for disorderly conduct.

President Urges Ratification Of Balkan and Italian Treaties

By Marshall Andrews

President Truman yesterday joined the fight to speed action on the Balkan and Italian peace treaties in the face of growing pressure to delay ratification. In a letter to Secretary of State Marshall, Mr. Truman termed prompt ratification of the treaties "vital to our foreign policy" and not inconsistent with aiding Greece and Turkey against communism.

Marshall presented the letter to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, during a hearing in which he was joined by former Secretary of State Byrnes in urging that the treaties be ratified without delay. They concern Italy, Bulgaria, Hungary and Roumania.

Many Italian-American organizations have pressed for delay in ratification of the Italian treaty until pacts with all European enemies have been completed. Some opponents have said the present Italian treaty would leave "the northern border of Italy open to Communist infiltration from Yugoslavia."

World Conference Cited Such delay, Marshall told the committee, would make it "difficult if not impossible" to work out treaties with Germany and Austria. The States, he said, must avoid "wobbling and swaying this way and that" or the world "would lose all confidence in our proposals and our leadership."

"And," he added, "I don't think we can afford that."

The President, in his letter to Marshall, said he understood it had been said that the failure of the Moscow conference had made it inadvisable to ratify the Balkan treaties now. He said it was also contended that their provisions conflict "with the views which I stated" to Congress on aid to Greece and Turkey. "I do not share this view," Mr. Truman wrote. "These treaties are the results of months of effort by outstanding leaders of both parties in this Government and of other governments to work out a common peace in this important area of the world."

Country's Leadership Involved "Nothing has occurred to render these efforts unsound or unwise. It is more than ever important that the Government of the United States should appear to the world as a strong and consistent force in international relations. "It would be a great misfortune and a heavy blow to our country's leadership in world affairs should we unilaterally withhold approval of these treaties."

Byrnes reminded the committee that 15 months of hard work were required to hammer out the treaties in their present form and that failure to ratify them now would "help only those who can exploit confusion and unrest." He added that failure to approve the pacts would amount to a "veto" of all actions by other nations which fought Italy.

"If we exercise that veto power," he said, "the responsibility for the maintenance of the armies of occupation and of chaotic political and economic conditions in these countries will rest with us."

Unmoved by persistent questioning by both Republicans and Democrats in the committee, Byrnes insisted that delay now would be a "tragic mistake" and would hamper solution of other European problems. Asked by Senator Connally

Men Recruited Britain Dying Of Starvation, Physician Says

150 In Unauthorized Strike Tie Down 20,000 Workers

London, May 6 (U.P.)—The National Coal Board created by act of the Labor government recruited strikebreakers today to end an unauthorized walkout of 150 which operators which kept 20,000 workers idle in Britain's recently nationalized coal mines.

Official sources said Prime Minister Attlee's cabinet had tackled the whole problem of unofficial strikes, after Fuel Minister Emanuel Shinwell had reported on the effects of the coal walkout.

The strike, which already has caused an estimated loss of 40,000 tons of vitally needed coal, began Sunday with the introduction of the five-day week in mines.

The coal board announced that the 150 strikers had been replaced by other mine workers, and that "certain pits" were reopened during the day. It was estimated about 7000 miners returned to work under the "emergency arrangements."

As a nation, we must literally perish unless we can break the vicious circle of insufficient work causing insufficient food causing insufficient work," he asserted.

The only way to break this circle, he said, is to grow more food at home and spend all the nation's foreign credits on food, he added. "Just jelping for the dunkerque spirit shows a total lack of knowledge of the country's starved condition. It is just foolishness."

Vienna, Austria, May 6 (U.P.)—Sporadic strikes were called in Vienna today to protest low food prices.

Senators Surprised Cooper Blocks D. C. Gun Bill Out of Fear of Police Zeal

By Robert Bruskin

Passage of the District's anti-gun-toting bill was blocked yesterday at the last minute by Senator John S. Cooper (R., Ky.), who feared it gave too much power to local police. Obviously surprised, District Committee members said it would be called up again on the Senate floor next week on the regular calendar. One vote will not be sufficient to block it then as it was yesterday when unanimous consent was required for passage.

"I want to examine this bill in the light of the new Supreme Court decision (Monday) in the Harris case," said Cooper, a former judge. The high court decision greatly broadened the powers of search and seizure. The bill has been approved by the House.

House Asked To Expedite Passage 'In Our Interest'

Secretary of State Says Need Made Even More Positive By Moscow Parley

By Robert C. Albright

Secretary of State George C. Marshall yesterday called on the House to pass the 400-million-dollar Greek-Turkish aid program "in our own interest and in the interest of world peace."

Marshall wrote House Foreign Affairs Chairman Charles A. Eaton (R., N. J.):

"My strong conviction that the immediate passage of this bill is a matter of the greatest urgency was made even more positive by the recent (Foreign Ministers) meeting in Moscow."

Eaton read Marshall's letter as the House opened two days of split-party debate on the program. Amendments Vote Feared

Backing the House Foreign Affairs Committee's report on the program, the Secretary said the pending bill "would enable the United States in this crisis to support the United Nations by pursuing a positive policy in behalf of Greece and Turkey."

"I hope that the bill will be enacted as expeditiously as possible."

Passage of the historic legislation by a "safe" margin was reliably indicated, when the House votes tomorrow or Friday, but proponents feared a close vote on these gutting opposition amendments:

- (1) Turning the program over to the United Nations; (2) slashing the 400-million-dollar aid authorization; and (3) eliminating Turkish assistance and military features added to Greece's aid.

The House Republican leadership, as the debate opened, maintained a strictly "hands off" attitude toward the program.

GOP Stand Is Guesswork A minority whip survey indicated 85 per cent of House Democrats will support the bill, but how Republican ranks would divide was sheer guesswork. No GOP roll was ordered or made.

House GOP Whip Leslie C. Arends (Illinois), who generally allies House Republicans before votes on party-backed measures, told newsmen:

"This is not a party matter. Every member of the House must decide for himself."

How sharp was the Republican stand? See POLICY, Page 2, Col. 1

Greece Says Albanians Fired on Patrol

Athens, May 6 (U.P.)—The Ministry of War charged today that Albanian soldiers ambushed and fired on a Greek patrol in Greek territory. It said the attack was unsuccessful and that the Albanians withdrew after a brief skirmish.

The ministry did not specify the location.

Balkan Cooperation Refused Lake Success, N. Y., May 6 (U.P.)—The United Nations Balkan Investigating Commission informed the Security Council tonight that Albania and Yugoslavia had refused to cooperate with the commission's subsidiary group which has been ordered to watch over the troubled Greek border area.

The commission telegraphed from Geneva, Switzerland, that it felt incompetent to deal with questions raised by the refusal of the two countries and, for that reason, was asking instructions.

The Council adopted a resolution April 18, over Russian opposition, directing the commission to maintain a watch in northern Greece until the Council could act on the commission's report bearing completion in Geneva.

The controversy arose, the telegram said, when United States Representative Mark E. Eshridge asked the liaison officers of Albania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia whether they would facilitate entry and exit and whether they would produce witnesses.

Both Albania and Yugoslavia said they could not participate in the work of the interim body. The commission's report is being prepared.

Eight Appeal In Purcellville Play Va. Bank Case

Richmond, Va., May 6 (AP).—Clerk Claude M. Dean of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals said today he had received notice of appeal from eight of the nine defendants convicted in the Fredericksburg bank funds case in district court.

It was regarded likely that the cases would not come up before the appeals court until the November term at Baltimore, due to the time that will be required to prepare the lengthy record. For the case to be docketed briefs must be in the hands of the court 30 days in advance of the opening of a term. There was some possibility that the case might be ready for docketing at the October term, which will be held at Richmond.

Only Paul Karsten, Jr., former vice president of the Farmers & Merchants State Bank of Fredericksburg, who was put on probation for a year on conviction of aiding and abetting in the misapplication of the bank's funds, has not filed notice of appeal with the Circuit Court. The eight others, who received fines, jail sentences, or both, were Hugh N. Rakes, his wife, Lillian Conner Rakes; Joseph E. Proffitt, president of the Floy County Bank; his law partner, Kyle M. Weeks; Joseph A. Sowers, cashier of the Floy County Bank; Clarence L. Robey, president of the Purcellville National Bank; D. E. Nelson, Roanoke realtor, and Harry Lamson, Washington loan broker.

The court clerk acknowledged receipt of the notices of appeal in a letter to defense counsel.

Jury Is Sought For Second Trial In Wife Slaying

Keyser, W. Va., May 6 (AP).—The Mineral County circuit court tried a second time today to find a jury to try Oscar Cosner, 36-year-old Keyser postman charged with the murder of his wife last September 3.

Spectators filled the gallery as they waited for Judge Ernest A. See to start the jury-picking procedure, expected to be a long process.

Cosner's trial was delayed several months ago when opposing attorneys questioned more than a hundred Mineral Countians without finding an acceptable panel.

Judge See ordered a group of prospective jurors brought from neighboring Tucker County, but the defense contended this abridged Corner's constitutional rights and won an appeal before the West Virginia Supreme Court.

Cosner is accused of bludgeoning his wife to death in a jealous frenzy when she returned home about 1 a. m. and refused to tell him where she had been.

2 Strikers Face Assault Charges
Martinsburg, W. Va., May 6 (AP).—Mrs. Rosemary Brenner and Miss Joyce Fortney, striking telephone operators of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of West Virginia, waived a preliminary hearing yesterday on charges arising out of a complaint made by a nonstriking operator.

Justice of the Peace King Larkin released the two women on $500 bond each to await action by the May grand jury. The complaint was made by Miss Margaret Hardy, who said the pair assaulted her and attempted to prevent her from entering the telephone office Saturday.

Martinsburg VFW Postpones Camp
Martinsburg, W. Va., May 6 (AP).—Limited finances have forced the postponement of the re-opening of the summer camp for children sponsored last summer by the local Veterans of Foreign Wars, the commander, Howard C. Swartz, announced today.

Necessity for improvements of the site on Back Creek in the mountains west of here and increased cost of operations make the project impossible this year. However, the facilities will be made available to the public for picnics and recreation, he said.

VMI Fellowships Set Up
Lexington, Va., May 6 (AP).—Former Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Jesse H. Jones of Houston, Tex., have made a gift of $25,000 to the Virginia Military Institute to finance fellowships in honor of Secretary of State George Catlett Marshall, the institute announced today.

Jones, former chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corp., and his wife have established the fellowship honoring General Marshall for the service he rendered his country as general of the Army and its Chief of Staff in World War II. Marshall is an alumnus of VMI.

Seven others were rejected in the report. John W. Car spoke in behalf of the Donohoe rd. in the Leesburg district and Fred W. Stump urged inclusion of the Holt rd. in the Mercer district, which were among those turned down by the road viewers. The board decided to reconsider the two roads.

An ordinance regulating sewage disposal was held over for further consideration after objections were raised.

Tulsa, Okla., May 7 (AP).—Mrs. Lewis M. Hull, Bonton, N. J., today was elected president of the National Council of State Garden Clubs at the eighteenth annual convention.

Man's Story Of Killing Girl In 1941 Probed
Norfolk, Va., May 6 (AP).—Bradley Casteel, 30-year-old Norfolk prisoner who told police that he had shot and killed a Baltimore, Md., girl six years ago and buried her body in Bone Hollow, in Wise County, today was docketed on a charge of murder and his case was continued in Norfolk Police Court until May 13.

The war veteran told police his story yesterday. Detective Leon Nowitzky listened to the story told by Casteel, now serving a sentence at the Norfolk City Farm on conviction of a drunkenness case, and obtained a signed statement from the man and swore out a warrant charging him with murder.

Meanwhile, Wise County authorities sought to check Casteel's story. Police records at Baltimore, Md., failed to reveal a person by the name of "Anne Richardson," which Casteel said was the girl's name, as missing from that city since July, 1941.

Casteel told a story to prison officials, who in turn called in Norfolk police. His statement gave these details:

While stationed at Fort Meade, Md., in 1941, he met "Anne Richardson," who resided on South Monroe st., Baltimore. She was 28. He went A.W.O.L. and with the girl went to Big Stone Gap, staying there several weeks.

When she said she wanted to return to Baltimore he shot her to death with an Army pistol. He could not explain why.

Later Casteel carried the body to Bone Hollow, dug a 5-foot-deep grave and buried it. The pistol was buried about 15 feet away.

After a week in West Virginia he returned to Fort Meade to surrender, spent the next two months in the guardhouse and then went to the Pacific. He was honorably discharged from the Army in February, 1944, and since that time has been in the country.

Early this year he went back to Big Stone Gap and to Bone Hollow and found the grave undisturbed and apparently undiscovered.

Livestock Income Gains
Richmond, Va., May 6 (AP).—Gross income of Virginia livestock producers during 1944 increased by more than 17 per cent over that of 1943 and reached a record of $6,919,000, the Virginia Cooperative Extension Service reported today.

The income, which derived from cattle and calves, hogs and sheep and lambs, compared with the 1943 gross of $5,837,000.

Several of the bills have to do with Baltimore City taxing powers, carrying parochial school children on public school buses, Montgomery County taxing powers, licensing slot machines for revenue purposes and with local officials' salaries.

Governor Lane worked in the seclusion of the executive mansion today to be sure that he would have given complete and final consideration to several of the more controversial bills.

While there remained a number of appointments to be made, the Governor postponed work on them until he finished with the legislative acts.

Plea for Bible Courses
Ashland, Va., May 6 (AP).—A plea for the teaching of religion in public schools was made here today by the Rev. Dr. George S. Reamey of Richmond, who declared that "legions of God out of the classroom" had resulted in delinquency, a high divorce rate, and an increasing number of alcoholics in America.

Dr. Reamey, editor of the Virginia Methodist Advocate, spoke at a Randolph-Macon College at the fourth-honors convocation today.

Aandolph-Macon conferred honorary degrees of doctor of divinity on the Rev. A. E. Acey of Danville, and the Rev. Roscoe Jones of Petersburg, at this morning's convocation. The degree of doctor of laws was conferred on James Mullen of Richmond.

Court Grants Paul Robeson Right to Sing at Albany School

Albany, May 6 (U.P.)—Paul Robeson today won State Supreme Court approval to sing in an Albany public school hall despite the court's "assumption" the famed Negro singer is "either a Communist or a fellow-traveler."

Justice Isadore Bookstein ruled that the Albany Board of Education was without power to "revoke or cancel" the permit it had issued for Robeson's concert Friday. But the court held Robeson must sing—not orate.

Robeson's alleged Communist leanings were disclosed in briefs attached to the decision which said, "The court assumes that the report of the House Un-American Committee establishes conclusively that Robeson is either a Communist, a fellow-traveler or that his ideology and philosophy are Communist."

The Albany Board of Education, after contracting for the singer's recital, rescinded permission for use of the hall when it was learned that Robeson was "supporting the Communist Party or its front organization."

Robeson said he would make no speeches at the concert.

Commodity Prices Show Slight Drop

By John W. Ball
Staff Reporter

Commodity prices dropped three tenths of 1 per cent in the last week of April to 1.7 per cent below the peak of late March, the wholesale price survey of the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday.

The level is still 33.9 per cent above a year ago, when price controls were in effect, BLS added.

The price peak reached in March was accompanied by a slackening in retail trade, a Commerce Department report yesterday indicated.

Commerce said March sales were off 1 per cent from February, after accounting for variations in season and trading days.

March Sales Up 16 Per Cent

Sales in March were 16 per cent above last year, however. They were estimated at 8.6 billion dollars.

Meantime the Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimated total cash income for the Nation's farmers during the first five months of this year will total 9.6 billion dollars, "about one fourth more than last year."

Farm products and foods went contrary to the general downward trend, BLS reported. "Advances for cotton, eggs, fresh fruits and vegetables more than offset weakness in grains and livestock," the report said.

"Raw cotton rose to a 1947 high on indications that the supply of old crop cotton was less than estimates."

Egg Prices Higher

"Low stocks and heavy demand resulted in generally higher prices for eggs. Despite adequate supplies, new potatoes were sharply higher."

"On the average, prices for farm products were 3.4 per cent below late March, and 31.1 above the corresponding week of 1946."

The food group dropped 1.2 per cent, BLS said, due to lower prices for most types except fruits and vegetables. Butter, cheese, flour, cured pork, edible fats and oils, all dropped, the report said. Declines were reported in all non-agricultural commodities except housefurnishings.

Prices for commodities other than farm products and foods, as a group, declined three-tenths of 1 per cent during the week... 28 per cent above the corresponding week a year ago.

March Food Sales Drop

From the Commerce Department came word that in March food store sales were down 2 per cent from February, 3 per cent from January, but up 19 per cent above a year ago.

Rising food prices drew critical comment from members of both Houses of Congress yesterday.

(1) Four Senators heatedly disputed statements that farm price supports contribute heavily to the high cost of living.

Republicans Milton R. Young (N. Dak.), George D. Aiken (Vt.), Wayne L. Morse (Oreg.) and Democrat James O. Eastland (Miss.) asserted the "farmer isn't to blame."

Morse said industrialists had taken advantage of short supplies to raise prices, and now are blaming the farmers to "save their faces."

Columnists, Radio Blamed

Young accused columnists and radio commentators of trying to convince consumers "that our Government is using the United States Treasury in a big way to raise farm prices, while a drive is being made to reduce industrial prices."

Aiken accused meat packers and cotton millers of depressing prices when commodities are in the farmers' hands, and raising prices later and trying to make consumers believe farmers are responsible.

Young asserted a farmer gets only 2½ cents for the wheat that goes into a 12-cent loaf of bread,

Montgomery's Mental Clinic Head Resigns

Charging that the Montgomery County Mental Hygiene Clinic is hampered by a small budget, limited staff and facilities, as well as public apathy, Dr. Mabel G. Wilkin, director, has announced her resignation as of October 1.

In a statement released yesterday, Dr. Wilkin, a psychiatrist, reported that 1804 visits were made by patients to the clinic during the year ending May 1, "representing only a fraction of the total mental hygiene needs in a community of this size."

Dr. Wilkin, who maintains an office in the Farmers Bank building, Rockville, declared:

"Although the clinic is solidly established in the county, we remain a small team dependent on a shoestring of a budget, available each year only insofar as the citizens of the county are able and inclined to contribute to the Community Chest which supports us."

"We are hampered—like the County Juvenile Court—by lack of staff and by lack of the necessary auxiliary community facilities with which to work, namely summer camps, expertly supervised all-year-round occupational and recreational centers for children and teen-agers, remedial reading and speech teachers outside or inside the school system, adequate foster homes and suitable institutions for the study and treatment of acutely disturbed youngsters who cannot make it in their own or foster homes."

"Montgomery County, as a comparatively wealthy and well-educated community, might be expected to assume front-rank leadership in the promotion of mental health—the number one health problem of our times."

"But here, as elsewhere, public opinion continues apathetic to the tremendous, unfulfilled mental hygiene—which is, to say—human of the human, emotional needs of needs of its citizenry and, preemi-

Tobey Halts RFC Hearing After Clash With Capehart

By The Associated Press
Senator Tobey (R., N. H.) suddenly called a halt to Senate Banking Committee hearings into RFC transactions with the B. & O. railroad yesterday, after he and Senator Capehart (R., Ind.) tangled loudly and angrily.

Tobey, chairman of the committee, accused Capehart of asking "un-American" questions and Capehart retorted that he is sick of Tobey's "aspirations."

After the exchange, Tobey said that since most members have been too busy to attend the hearings, he will name a subcommittee within two weeks to carry on the inquiry.

Only Tobey and Capehart showed up for yesterday's session. The bitter exchange between them occurred during testimony on an $80 million dollar bond transaction between the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Reconstruction Finance Corp.

Question Precipitates Clash
Tobey cut in as Capehart questioned a witness, Randolph Phillips of New York, about whether he had changed his name from Moses.

"Your questions seem unfair and un-American," the chairman suddenly fired out. "I don't give a damn whether a man's a Jew and took his mother's name at two and one-half years. I'm interested in the B. & O., not red herrings."

The red-haired Capehart flushed. Bringing his fist down on his chair arm, he shouted:

"I'm sick and tired of your casting aspersions at me. You may be the great Senator from New Hampshire but I represent the State of Indiana."

"You've been doing a lot of talking, but there are others who are going to do some talking from here out!"

Name Legally Changed
Phillips related that when he was 2½ years old his father, Darius Moses, died and his mother and other members of the family legally assumed her maiden name of Phillips.

The subject of the name arose out of testimony of Russell Snodgrass, B. & O. vice president, who said he understood Phillips' name really was Moses. Phillips previously had been identified as opposing the railroad's 1945 reorganization plan, which was effected with approval of the RFC.

As Snodgrass testified, Phillips shot to his feet and demanded to be heard. Capehart then questioned him until Tobey interrupted.

Snodgrass' testimony dealt with a proxy fight in 1944 led by Phillips in opposition to the reorganization plan. Tobey has criticized the reorganization which came when the railroad owed the RFC $80 million dollars. Tobey has contended extension of this loan to 1965 was illegal.

Baukhages Takes Stand
Tobey called F. L. Baukhages, B. & O. general solicitor, who under questioning said that in his opinion Phillips is "a professional strike-suit."

Tobey asked what that meant. Baukhages said it was "an ancient profession, where a man acquires an interest in a large corporation to make trouble for his own personal profit."

Baukhages then told Tobey: "I have been held up here by yourself, sir, and by others, as being a crooked person. Mr. Young (Robert R. Young, chairman of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad, who testified yesterday) who I believe has a very close connection with Mr. Phillips, though I cannot prove it, has said I am dishonest."

"My record is an open book. I have been up for public criticism on the basis of charges that have been found groundless, and if I no longer have a good reputation, Senator Tobey, I have you to thank."

Tobey challenged him to find anywhere in the record an instance where he had charged the witness with dishonesty. Baukhages said he accepted the challenge.

The Variety Club honored 350 women at a Mother's Day luncheon yesterday at the Shoreham Hotel.

Secretary of Agriculture Clinton Anderson, a surprise guest, paid tribute to his own mother and to all mothers. The women received corsages and divided 75 door prizes of from $5 to $75.

Dr. Sylvan Danzansky served as toastmaster, representing associate members and presented awards to Mrs. Helen Brylawski as the oldest mother present, and Mrs. Herbert Sachs and Mrs. Irwin Lust, youngest mothers, both having 7-week-old babies.

Lewis, Owners Again Differ on Contract Basis

John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers and operators of the Nation's soft coal mines failed again yesterday to reach a basis on which to start negotiations for a new labor contract.

Called together by Capt. N. H. Collisson, Government coal mines administrator, to attempt to negotiate an agreement to take effect when the Government gives up the mines June 30, operators and Lewis adjourned shortly afterwards until May 15.

Collisson was quick to assure newsmen that the conference had not collapsed. Instead, he said, "real progress was made."

It was the same sort of announcement he made last week, when Southern Coal Producers broke up the conference by flatly refusing to dicker with Lewis on an industry-wide basis.

Yesterday Collisson is believed to have laid before the meeting information he has gathered from individual southern operators. It was reported some had agreed to Lewis' demand for a Nation-wide contract.

Collisson said the meeting was delayed until May 15 to give operators an opportunity to attend a mine owners' convention in Cleveland next week.

Izvestia Says Turkey Teems With U. S. and British Agents

Moscow, May 6 (AP)—Izvestia, Soviet government newspaper, charged today that Turkey is teeming with British and American military instructors, British and American agents in civilian clothes and installations of various kinds.

"Turkish reactionaries," said Izvestia, are intent upon creating a new "Cordon Sanitaire" against the Soviet Union reaching from Iran through Turkey into the Balkans and Central Europe. Izvestia said these "reactionaries" had learned nothing from the failure of Europe's politicians after World War I to erect a zone of buffer states against the Soviet Union.

The article said "in any cafe or restaurant in Ankara, Izmir and Istanbul one can see English and American instructors dressed in the uniforms of their armies. Besides, numerous English and American agents operate presently in the country under the guise of various businessmen, etc., dressed in civilian clothes."

"It is not without interest to note that much work is being done on expanding and equipping a network of airdromes with the aid of the Americans. New and powerful radio stations are being erected in Ankara, Istanbul and Izmir."

The article declared the American concern of Westinghouse had contracted to build five large airdromes in Turkey, and that civil airlines started by the British and

House Passes Bill To Repay Keeler Fine

A bill to return a $5000 fine to Elwood L. Keeler, Los Angeles, Calif., was passed yesterday by the House and sent to the Senate.

The House Judiciary Committee said Keeler was convicted in 1941 of conspiring to sell industrial diamonds to Japan, paid his fine and served a prison sentence. He subsequently was granted a full presidential pardon on grounds that his conviction had not been supported by the evidence, but the fine already had been paid to the Treasury.

Only U. S. Lets World Bank Lend Its Money

United States alone among the 44 nations in the World Bank was agreed to let the bank use its subscription payment to lend to other nations, an authoritative source said yesterday.

The other 43 say they are not in a position now to have their currencies lent out to other nations. This hold-back was described as unimportant at this particular time, however, since none of the nine members asking $2,553,875,000 in loans wants anything but U. S. dollars.

The bank's stock of subscribed dollars will be only $721,392,500 even after the U. S. finishes its subscription payments three weeks from now. The only way the bank can add to them in the near future is to get dollars from private American investors.

The bank is preparing now to borrow from these investors, so it will have more to lend to members, by selling—probably sometime this summer or fall—its own bonds in this country, in demonstrations as small as $1000.

France First in Line

Before then, and probably this month or next, the bank is expected to begin making loans out of its subscriber capital.

France is reported in informed quarters to be first in line for a loan, although it is more likely to be two hundred million dollars than the five hundred million dollars she applied for. Denmark, which wants 50 million dollars, is described as due for a loan soon also.

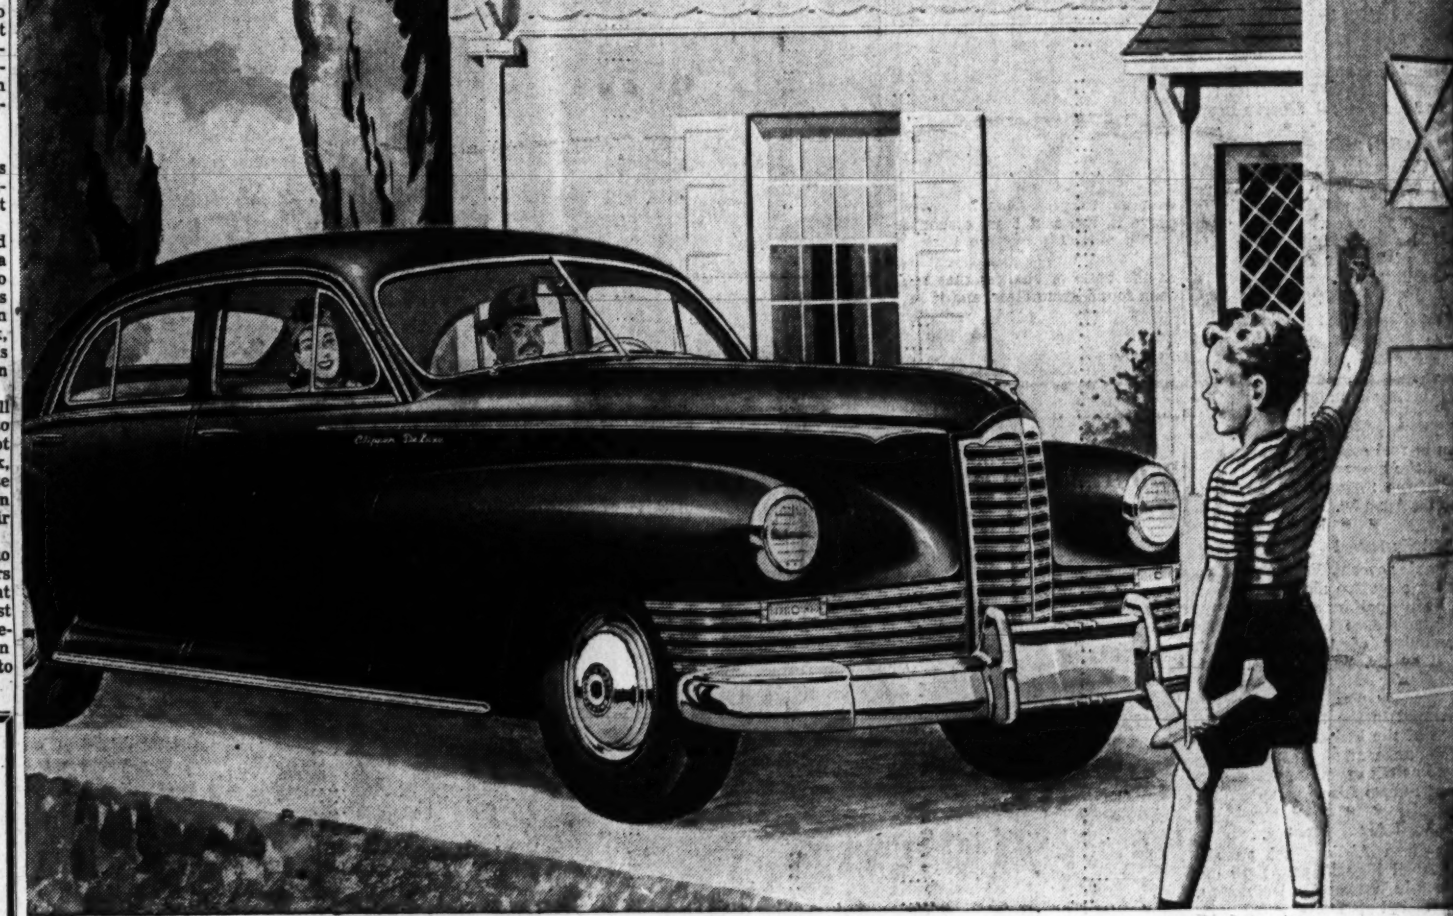

The holdback by virtually all members in permitting the bank to lend their currencies does not greatly worry officials of the bank, well-posted sources say, because the officials hope their permission will be given by the time their money is wanted.

The holdback is attributed to the fact that many of the members were hard hit by the war and, at a time when they feel they must borrow to stage an economic comeback, they also feel they are in no position to put out money to lend.

When a nation's money is lent out, it serves as a sort of ticket to buy in that country, and the holdback members are said also to take the position that they aren't yet able to produce enough goods to sell freely for export.

Holdbacks in permitting the loan of subscribed funds are authorized for members under terms of the Bretton Woods Agreement under which the bank and its twin, the World Monetary Fund, were organized a little over a year ago.

Members can hold back on that part of their subscriptions put up in their currencies, but not on the two per cent of subscriptions they were required to pay in gold or U. S. dollars.

FIRE PREVENTION IN LOW COST HOUSING with OAKTRED

The Modern One-Piece Flooring

To the President's Conference on Fire Prevention

Here is one of the greatest steps forward in minimizing fire hazard, in low-cost housing.

A recent agreement by this company with the National Housing Agency and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation assures large scale production of OAKTRED, the modern one-piece flooring with maximum fire resistance.

Actual blow-torch tests and other fire testing procedures demonstrate that OAKTRED cannot be ignited. OAKTRED flooring thus serves as an effective fire retardant.

Owners, builders, banks and financial institutions, housing officials and fire departments represented at the President's Conference will welcome the foresight of the National Housing Agency and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in making OAKTRED available at an economical cost.

This modern, one-piece flooring that is poured into place will materially assist in reducing America's staggering annual fire losses.

FOR THOSE INTERESTED IN HOUSING PROJECTS all information as to technical details, costs and method of installation of this scientifically formulated flooring composition may be obtained by writing:

FINANCE DEPT.: During the negotiations for the settlement of the Konrad Bercovici plagiarism suit against Charles Chaplin, in the chambers of Federal Judge Burke, Bercovici's lawyer, Louis Nizer, asked for $150,000. Chaplin rejected it. "After all, Mr. Chaplin," Nizer reminded him, "this would be a legitimate business deduction on your tax return. And to a man of your income and wealth it wouldn't mean much." "Mr. Nizer, there is a mistaken notion that I am a very rich man," replied Chaplin. "To be perfectly frank, all my possessions aren't worth more than four million dollars."

THEATRE DEPT.: Many years ago the Theater Guild received so many pleas from young hopefuls that the guild officials decided to do something about finding new talent. A number of prominent actors and actresses were invited by the guild to audition the unknowns. Each was placed in charge of a group of applicants and report on their capabilities. ... Lynn Fontaine took her group to a rehearsal room, tested each one and then reported to the guild: "Not a particle of talent in my group—thank God."

BUSINESS DEPT.: When Ambassador Paul Porter accepted the offer of a partnership in the law firm of ex-Trust Buster Thurman Arnold and ex-Undersecretary of Int. Aff. Fortas, the three men then had to decide upon the firm name and the order of name-listing. Each suggested that his own name be last. ... The obstacle of modesty finally was overcome by resorting to coin-tossing. Three coins were flipped, odd man's name to be first; the second name to be determined by coin-matching. Thus it was that the firm name—Arnold, Fortas & Porter—came to be.

POLITICS: Porter once worked for a Lexington, Ky., newspaper published by De Shay Breckenridge, who never pulled his punches in a political fight. The local issue that year was over the selection of a fire chief, and the paper delayed taking a stand. Finally, with but a few days remaining, Porter asked Breckenridge, "Which one are we supporting for fire chief?" "I haven't made up my mind yet," Breckenridge replied. "But when I do—we'll be darned bitter about it."

SOCIAL NOTE: Deems Taylor was in the Stork Club, where he received a message that a lady from Chicago was in the room, that she was one of his admirers, and that she would be thrilled at meeting him. ... Once, when Taylor received such a message, he was introduced to a lady who gushed over him, said that meeting him was the greatest thrill in her life, etc., etc., and that she hoped Mr. Taylor was not too embarrassed by her statements. "Oh, that's all right," shrugged Taylor. "Just kneel."

NEWS DEPT.: As an aftermath of the Bercovici-Chaplin case, Orson Welles will be billed in Chaplin's newest picture, "Monsieur Verdoux." The billing will be: "Based on an idea by Orson Welles." ... The cat which disappeared from James Mason's home in Connecticut finally has been found—two miles away from the Mason house—dead. ... Lt. Gen. Stratemeier, flying as a passenger on an American Airlines DC-6, found the stewardesses wearing five-star insignias on their uniforms. The insignias are real Army ones, and were purchased at the Pentagon.

Pulitzer Shoulder Was Coldest

Of Today's Forgotten Men, One Eugene O'Neill Sadly Leads the List

By Richard L. Coe

PEOPLE OUT of the news: EUGENE O'NEILL: America's greatest living playwright was conspicuous in his absence from the list of Pulitzer Prize winners. ... For the first O'Neill play in 12 years not to be getting a prize is news in itself. ... As in '42 and '44, the judges made no awards for drama this year. ... Also putting Arthur Miller and Lillian Hellman in the shade. ... Miller's "All My Sons" topped the Critics Circle Award and he seemed to be counting on the Pulitzer nod. ... Miss Hellman, who feuded with the critics over their reception of "Another Part of the Forest" can now also feud with the Pulitzer judges. ... But certainly the most dramatic figure stemming from no drama award is the sick giant of the theater, O'Neill. ... If "The Iceman Cometh" struck some of us as being too long to be up to his standards, the fact that his ambitious work was passed over has a bitter sadness. ... How for instance, would you be feeling this morning if your work, produced during a long illness, were so pointedly cold-shouldered? ... A little lonely again. ... You don't have to be told that it cost six million dollars to make or that Jennifer Jones, Gregory Peck, Joseph Cotten, Lionel Barrymore, Walter Huston, Herbert Marshall and Lillian Gish are in it. ... But who's Niven Busch? ... He only wrote the thing.

NIVEN BUSCH: Today in 54 theaters in the New York area a single picture is being presented in a novel first-showing arrangement. ... This is "Duel in the Sun," which David O. Selznick is presenting as his most ambitious try since "Gone With the Wind." ... So much money has been spent in making four simple words, duel, in, the and sun, familiar to the American public, that our testy wife remarks she's had enough of sunshine dueling without seeing the flick. ... Anyway, it's a new way of introducing a picture and showmen will be watching the results with an eye to trying it

P. T. BARNUM: Yesterday, under the guidance of Dr. William M. Mann, the Zoo's guardian and head of the James E. Cooper Top of the Circus Fans Association, Washington, remembered Barnum for it was 75 years ago yesterday and today that his circus played Washington for the first

ST. PATRICK: Ireland's patron saint can rest easy. ... There'll be no Glocca Morra on the map of Eire. ... Despite the efforts of "Finian's Rainbow" producers, the Irish Tourist Association will not be renaming a hamlet in honor of the mythical one made famous by Ireland's map, St. Pat, is undecided.

Learn Lessons Well
Hollywood.—Dana Andrews, who portrays a blind pianist in "Memory of Love," has never played a note of music in his life. ... Mac Rabinowitch, noted pianist, who taught him the proper fingering for the 15 numbers he plays in the picture, says, however, that after Dana's three months of study, no musician would believe the star can't play the piano.

Comes The Light

The District Commissioners have acted wisely to forestall lengthy harangues over daylight saving time at today's hearing. By now all the arguments, both pro and con, are more than a little shopworn. There should be little doubt in the Commissioners' minds as to how the people feel. The sentiment in favor of daylight saving has been demonstrated clearly. Doubtless there will be attempts today to trot out all the curious combinations of illogic that have been circulated in opposition to daylight saving, even to the ridiculous contentions that it is physically injurious or against the will of God! The Commissioners should not be influenced by the fanatics. The two-minute rule on testimony by individuals is a good one, and we hope the Commissioners stick to it. It is important, of course, that both sides be given a fair chance to make themselves heard. At this advanced stage, however, the hearing can hardly be more than a formal count of the persons and groups for and against daylight saving who can take the trouble to testify. The hearing can do nothing but confirm what the Commissioners know already. If their decision is to be in the interest of all the people, it must be "yes." Furthermore, the decision should be announced promptly at the conclusion of today's hearing so that Washingtonians can prepare for the change this Sunday.

Crime Hides Principle

The Supreme Court, contrary to some of the immediate reactions, has not pulled the props from under the Fourth Amendment in the George Harris case. "This court," wrote Chief Justice Vinson for the majority, "has consistently asserted that the rights of privacy and personal security protected by the Fourth Amendment . . . are to be regarded as of the very essence of constitutional liberty." We have no doubt that the court will continue to protect law-abiding citizens against outrageous invasion of their homes. At the same time it seems to us that the court has unreasonably stretched the definition of "reasonable" searches and seizures permitted by the Constitution.

Two valid warrants for the arrest of Harris had been issued; so the entrance of his apartment was entirely legal. But the arresting officers had no warrant to search his apartment. A thorough search was nevertheless conducted in an effort to recover cancelled checks that had been stolen. The checks were not found, but the officers took from his private papers draft cards which later served as evidence for the conviction of Harris under the Selective Service Act. All this was justified by the court on the ground that "the search in this case" did not go "beyond that which the situation reasonably demanded." "Search and seizure incident to lawful arrest," the Chief Justice commented, "is of ancient origin and has long been an integral part of the law-enforcement procedures of the United States and the individual States."

That conclusion seems to us shortsighted. In their dissenting opinions Justices Jackson, Frankfurter, Murphy and Rutledge point out that the Constitution does not leave to the court full discretion as to what constitutes a reasonable search. After forbidding unreasonable searches and seizures, it provides that "no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." This test seems to have been ignored in the Harris case. If Harris had been arrested on the street, it would certainly be beyond the pale of reason to suppose that the arresting officers could have searched his home without a warrant. To say that the accident of his arrest at home gives them this right, is to leave to the discretion of the FBI whether a man's home shall be ransacked for any and all kinds of evidence against him. This leaves the right of search, as Justice Jackson says, without any reasonable bounds. "By this reasoning," Justice Frankfurter concluded, "every illegal search and seizure may be validated if the police find evidence of crime." It also appears, as Judge Learned Hand said many years ago in another case, "that one's papers are safe only so long as one is not at home."

To our way of thinking that is thoroughly unsound doctrine. And, while we do not believe that the court will use the precedent to license unlimited encroachments upon privacy, we deplore the resort to expediency in even a single case. Our constitutional safeguards to civil rights should be rigorously upheld even when they shield a criminal. Protection of the individual's right to be secure in his home is a greater light in our democratic galaxy than freedom of the police in bringing criminals to justice. We cannot avoid the conclusion that the court looked so intently at a crime that it failed to see the principle which should have been controlling.

Whither France?

Strikes and demonstrations in many parts of France indicate that the purge of five Communist cabinet members may pave the way to a greater crisis than the governmental one that broke out Sunday. On a variety of problems of late the Communists have been opposing the coalition government of which they are part along with the Popular Republicans and the Socialists. The latest was the wage-freezing order of Premier Ramadier. In a bloc they voted on Sunday against the government on a vote of confidence connected with this order, which in spite of the grievous disparities in the French wage structure, is regarded as imperative in the back-to-the-land struggle with inflation. This time Premier Ramadier took his courage in both hands and released the wage-boosting Communist members. Thus the powerful Communists, first in strength in the National Assembly, are now in opposition, and Premier Ramadier, himself a Socialist, is left with a ministry that may be roughly designated as centrist.

No doubt the two extremes, the Communists on the left and the Gaullists on the right, will not allow this government to function in peace. From now on the real struggle in France will be conducted outside the government, outside even the Assembly, and the government indeed may be reduced to the role of onlooker. Both the Communists and General de Gaulle have been stirred to activity by what both of them think is an imminent world crisis. It is the French habit to anticipate crises. In this case they seem to have a correct view of the future and, it may be, the cabinet coup in France is the opening gun of a new world struggle. In all likelihood the Communists were quite ready to quit the Ramadier Cabinet. At least they have been giving every indication hitherto of wishing to close their ranks and renew their strength in the country for collision with General de Gaulle. For the general is on the warpath against communism. The crucial question, as ever, is what the Socialists, who hold the balance of power in the French equation, will do. They are torn between fear of a party dictatorship and fear of a personal dictatorship. How long they can stay on the sidelines is anybody's guess. But events are moving them rapidly to a decision—a pregnant one for France, for nothing is likelier to lead to civil commotion than continued indecision on the part of the Socialists.

The United States has a vital interest in preventing any civil war in France. For it would be, as it was in Spain, an international war, with the Communists fighting to Russify France. At least De Gaulle has no allegiance other than to France. And there is nothing in his record to justify the fear that he wishes to set up a dictatorship of his own. If, since his reemergence in the political arena, he has neglected to clarify his policies (other than to reiterate his position in favor of a strong executive within a constitutional frame), the deficiency may soon be repaired as the result of the new polarization of forces in France. General de Gaulle, after all, was the main spring of the Monnet Plan for the reconstruction of France, now put on the shelf as a result of the crise de regime.

Meantime the United States should be alerted to the potentialities of the French situation, though it would be highly dangerous to make promises that cannot be fulfilled. However, everything possible should be done to reduce the Communist appeal to the French electorate. What happened in the last days of the Weimar Republic is much to the point in our relations with France. As soon as Chancellor Bruening fell, the powers began to fall over themselves in making concessions to Hitler—concessions which, if made to Bruening, might have helped (given unity among the German democratic parties) to prevent the totalitarian Nazis from coming to power. This is a lesson not only for the Socialists in France but also for the United States in dealing with France. It is a sign of the confusion in France that all that has changed there is a switch of the darkening clouds from the government to the nation.

Fire Away

The visiting firemen in Washington this week are here for a more serious purpose than mere glad-handing. It is highly encouraging to witness the response of officials and private citizens of every State in the Union to the President's Conference on Fire Prevention. This meeting is the first of its kind. It is designed to focus public attention on a destroyer which last year resulted in more than 10,000 deaths and a property loss of more than half a billion dollars in the United States alone. The only way to combat it successfully is, first, to bring about general realization of its magnitude, and then to inculcate a continuing sense of public responsibility for doing something about it.

Last year the President's Conference on Highway Safety played a material part in reducing the automobile death toll. Probably the fire prevention conference results will be less spectacular because of the complexity of the causes. That is all the more reason for approaching the problem on a broad, scientific basis. The President's conference seeks to do just this. It is stressing not only proper building design, construction and operation, but fire prevention education, fire laws and enforcement, fire fighting equipment and the like as well. What the representatives pick up here will be translated into ultimate community action through the medium of State conferences.

There have been enough terrifying fires during the past year to make a safety bug of every American. The trouble has been that the danger has not been reduced to terms of personal responsibility and action. It has been easy to slip into lax building code and fire law enforcement on the grounds that the violations are too numerous to permit prompt correction. Likewise it has been easy for most persons to pay lip service to safety by cleaning out their attics during Fire Prevention Week each year, and then to fall back into old habits.

The war against carelessness is eternal. It is not a one-week affair. Obviously what is required is a ceaseless pounding home of the essential ingredients of fire prevention. If the conference can bring to each individual a fuller realization of his stake in fire safety, it will have proved its worth.

Pulitzer Prizes

Needless to say, we are highly gratified by the award of one of this year's Pulitzer Prizes to Mr. Edward T. Folliard for his series of articles on the Columbians, Inc., published in The Post last December. We are pretty certain that no one who remembers these articles, or who is generally acquainted with Mr. Folliard's work, will say that this honor was not fully deserved. Broadly speaking, good newspaper reporters tend to fall into one of three categories—those whose primary value lies in their ability to uncover important news; those whose value lies primarily in their skill in writing the news, and finally those who have a special aptitude for interpreting the news, that is, for discerning and clarifying the meaning that underlies the superficial facts. Mr. Folliard is one of those rare and invaluable journalists who combine in themselves all three gifts.

Most of the other Pulitzer prizes in Journalism—to Mr. Frederick Woltman for his articles about the activities and intrigues of Communists in the United States; to Mr. William H. Grimes for his editorials in the Wall Street Journal; to Mr. Brooks Atkinson for his correspondence from Russia in the New York Times, and to Mr. Arnold Hardy for his memorable pictures of the Atlanta hotel fire—also seem to us to have been bestowed with admirable discernment and judgment. It seems however a great pity that some recognition could not have been given by the committee—even at the cost of stretching the letter of the Pulitzer bequest—to Mr. John Hersey for his magnificent report from Hiroshima, published last year in the New Yorker.

House With An Axe

What we all must guard against is agreement with the theory of economy in the cost of Government and opposition to any practice of it. Economy is essential. It is especially vital after a war marked by a profligacy of spending which cluttered up the departments with surplus personnel and services. Private industry has been called upon to retrench as part of its reconversion from war to peace. Why not Government, too? However, the House Appropriations Committee seems to be wielding the axe in a hit-or-miss fashion. The cut in the Commerce Department budget, for instance, includes one of 50 per cent for air navigation facilities. This runs counter to the express direction of Congress. Early this year there was a run of accidents in the air, and committees of both houses, responding to public alarm and clamor, set up two air safety subcommittees to study better passenger protection. Is it wise economy to throw all the work and recommendations of the air safety subcommittees out the window and risk the lives of air passengers? The question provides its own answer.

This is an example of false economy which makes us question the wisdom of the over-all activity of the House Appropriations Committee. Other examples already have been cited. In some cases, moreover, policy rather than economy seems to be governing House consideration. In that category was the elimination of the Division of Power in the Interior budget. Here the House seemed to be saying that it did not like the power policies now embodied in law and wanted to cripple them. We would take issue with this position, and protest the deprivation to Secretary Krug of a division which enabled him to keep in touch with the Federal Government's far-flung power properties. Refusal to reinstate the information program of the State Department also had less to do with economy than with policy. The objection seems to have less to do with the idea than with the man responsible for its execution, Assistant Secretary of State William Benton. We hope that Secretary Marshall will take the hint, and then renew his request. The program's the thing, not the man.

COMPOSER IN HIS TIME

The channel moves ever outward, slow parabola of light, dust of sound riding the long lanes of time.
And on the bright face of its stream
the individuals shine their light, bright or dim a moment, and are gone.
But still for them sweet is the moment of passing, lovely like stars swinging slowly around the sky on a clear night, so is that hour when the beauty of sound runs in their brains and pours into form under their hands, and they turn away with their seals upon it.

Jewish Refugees

At this moment there is pending in Congress a bill, H. R. 2910 which would authorize the United States during the next four years to admit displaced persons "in a number equivalent to a part of the total quota members unused during the war years." This could permit the admission of up to 400,000 displaced persons, but I do not see the Zionist Organization of America rushing to the support of this measure. Instead, they continue their incessant denunciation of the British and of everyone who blocks their aspirations for political statehood in Palestine.

While members are recruited and funds solicited in moving terms of human suffering, the tragedy of the homeless is not the real concern of the Zionists. Here are some quotations from a recent speech of the president of the Zionist Organization of America: "I am happy that our movement has finally veered around to the point where we are all, or nearly all talking about a Jewish state. That was always classical Zionism. But I ask . . . are we again, in moments of desperation, going to confuse Zionism with refugeism, which is likely to defeat Zionism . . . Zionism is not a refugee movement. It is not a product of the second World War nor of the first. Were there no present displaced Jews in Europe and were there free opportunities for Jewish immigration in other parts of the world at this time, Zionism would still be an imperative necessity."

The immediate entry into Palestine of 100,000 homeless Jews was unanimously recommended by the Anglo-American Commission of Inquiry and the passage of the displaced persons bill H. R. 2910 would go a long way toward relieving the suffering, which as you point out "is a moral obligation that will remain on our conscience until it is liquidated." To accomplish these ends, no secret is made of the fact that the United Nations is required by any group claiming to speak politically for members of the Jewish religion anywhere.

"Jim Crow Theater"

The Washington League of Women Shoppers congratulates The Post for its splendid editorial on the Jim Crow situation at the National Theater. Our members have helped picket the theater for its opposition to racial discrimination. Picketing has now been suspended in order to reproduce an atmosphere more conducive to an obtrusive retreat by the theater from its untenable position. When the year of grace given by Actors' Equity expires on June 1, 1948, none of its members will appear and probably no modern plays will be available. Add the fact that the theater has just lost a court action involving the exclusion of Negroes, and perhaps the management will conclude that it miscalculated in resisting last winter's requests for admission of Negroes and will quietly put into practice a more enlightened policy.

HELEN LOEFFLER,
Washington.

Again I wish to commend you for your splendid presentation of the principles involved in the National Theater issue. In your April 25 editorial entitled "Jim Crow Theater" you continued to maintain your high standard of discernment. You give your readers a fearless evaluation of the facts. It seems to me that this is an excellent example of the process of education for which there is a constant clamor by the critics of the theater campaign. I am sure none of us would deny the need for education. This whole misunderstanding between peoples and the resulting mistreatment of one group by another has devel-

Longer Skirts

Mr. E. G. Hall of Northampton, England, does not approve of the longer skirts worn by the fairer sex and through the columns of your May 2 edition has voiced his disapproval.

Could it be that through some secret agreement on the high seas by our late President Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, the English Commonwealth reserves the right to criticize and dictate the skirt length of our women. Evidently Mr. Hall is not aware that Congress is now in session. Judging from the many bills which have been introduced to curb something or other, it would not be difficult to convince some Congressman or Senator that legislation was necessary to curb the downward trend of skirts. In any event, our policy is to please our good neighbors even though it may cost several million dollars. The taxpayers will not mind.

Free Economy

I have been out of the service almost two years now, and during that time the country has taken several steps toward what some economists, some newspapermen, and a large group of politicians call a "free economy." Having watched the cost of the necessities rise rapidly while my civilian salary has taken no equivalent rise, I am motivated to ask this question: This is a free economy, but free for whom?

U. S. Employment Service

The Senate Appropriations Committee has acted to save the United States Employment Service. The House of Representatives last month (HR 2700) slashed the appropriation request of $3,912,000 for personnel, which the Administration considered the minimum necessary to run the USES, to a meager $900,000.

The Senate Appropriation Committee recommends an appropriation of $2,246,400 for USES in the 1948 fiscal year. However, the Senate committee proposes to curtail the funds available for grants to the State for the operation of the State systems of public employment to $14 million dollars. Since the amount now provided for the States will hardly be adequate, the Senate committee probably intends to trade a threatened cut of 14 million dollars in funds to be granted to the States for at least the bare minimum necessary to maintain the Federal USES. In other words, the Senate committee recognizes that the House slash was inspired by lobbyists representing the State unemployment compensation administrators. While director of the United States Employment Service I saw, at first hand, how essential, in the sort of economy in which we live, is a progressive system of public employment offices ready and able to bring men and jobs together. But it is as an employer who now uses the USES that I urge workers and employers alike to watch closely during the coming weeks the debate on this appropriation in the Senate, in conference committee and again in the House. Self-seeking political interests must not be permitted to demolish the USES simply because it has dared insist that the several State governments use Federal funds to operate non-political, efficient State employment services. The United States Employment Service was created by the Wagner-Peyser Act of 1933 and given additional responsibilities in the GI Bill of Rights) to perform three tasks. First, to distribute among the States, funds appropriated by Congress to cover the essential costs of operating the State systems of public employment offices. The States contribute not one dime. It is clearly to the advantage of the political hangers-on who handle the personnel appointments, the expenditures of money and who administer the program in the States to see to it that the United States Employment Service cannot review their operations and find them out in any extravagant misuse of Federal funds. They succeeded quite well in the House of Representatives. Second, the United States Employment Service is responsible for developing and encouraging the use in all local offices of improved methods of bringing jobs and workers together. Since 1933, the United States Employment Service has vastly improved our ways and means of matching idle men and empty jobs. It has developed a notable dictionary of job titles and effective tests for measuring the skills and potentialities of workers. It has learned how to advise workers, especially veterans, of the most fruitful fields for employment; and how to measure the employment opportunities in each community, industry, and occupation. It has shown employers how to analyze the jobs they have so that the right workers may be selected, and then trained. Doing these things costs money, but only a small fraction of the benefits which these services render to our economy. It is doubtful whether they can be done with the $2,246,400 budget recommended by the Senate committee. Third, the United States Employment Service must perform certain activities supplementing those of the State employment services. The most important are: (1) the operation of an interstate clearance system under which employers in one State can be given an opportunity to hire needed workers not found locally,

Back Yard Strangers

Good Neighbor Test

THOSE WHO are interested in seeing this country practice its precepts are hopeful that the warm hospitality now greeting President Miguel Aleman of Mexico may have after effects, in the life of John Gonzales, young Mexican-American prototype of John Doe. No flags are hung out for John Gonzales or his sister when they go job hunting. Many industries close their doors to them. So do many restaurants and schools. One young Mexican-American who went from the beet fields to give his life on the Aleutian Islands was the first private in the last war to get a Congressional Medal of Honor. Yet his sister could not work in a restaurant in her community because of public prejudice. Mexican nationals flocked across the border into Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California in wartime to meet labor shortages. Many of them remain. Now they, together with their fellow countrymen already in the Southwest, as well as many Mexican-Americans there, present problems in housing, schooling, employment. It is a test of good neighborliness that can only be met by something more substantial than oratory.

THE WHOLE QUESTION of giving justice and friendship to lonely and obscure "foreigners" in our back yards is becoming more pressing. For increasingly we must honor and entertain officially the high representatives of the mother countries of these immigrants. More and more we must work with these foreign officials in international organizations. Increasingly in this dangerous world we must win friends among those foreign countries whose cultural children in our midst have been ignoring, neglecting, even mistreating. However, there are growing movements—small as yet—to bridge the wide gulfs that in most communities separate persons of recent foreign background from those whose foreign connections are far enough back that they dare boast of them. Some enlightened communities are trying to draw together these newer Americans and those of the older cliques in civic and cultural activities. Such organizations as the East and West Association are doing effective work of this kind in many cities. One small area of this grass roots hospitality is the holiday entertainment that has been given clerical employees of the United Nations. This was started by a Washington group of women that became aroused over reports that New York invitations for high officials in the international organization were going begging while the files of employees were left to loneliness in their hall bedrooms. Through these women's efforts groups of women and men employees have been entertained in Washington homes for holiday weekends. Now the movement has been taken up in New York.

THIS OF COURSE is a far cry from the social justice and economic opportunity needed by John Gonzales and other of the foreign born or descended who live in city or rural slum areas of this country but it is a sign of a growing social expansiveness that may eventually break down an anti-minority bias to which four out of five Americans confess. President Aleman's visit, many hope, will create enough goodwill that some of it will spill over into much needed action in regard to Mexico. Continuation of the Latin-American cultural relations program is now at the mercy of the Senate, as a House appropriations committee has cut its budget by 40 per cent. If this stands it, will mean curtailment among other services of the American Library in Mexico City which crowds line up for blocks to patronize. Also, the closer defense and economic relations with Mexico that are expected to grow out of President Aleman's visit require from people of the United States something more than learning to dance the tango or even to study Spanish. They demand a deeper understanding of Mexico's bread and butter problems, and her social and cultural aspirations, as well as more respect and justice for those of her humble citizens who come north of the border.

but available in distant States; (2) the exposure of workers in depressed communities in one State to opportunities for employment in other States where they are needed; and (3) the development of tools to assist the physically handicapped and the racially underprivileged; and (4) studying and stimulating private, educational, and other governmental agencies to study and devise ways of aiding workers to find the "right" job and aiding employers to utilize each worker at his maximum effectiveness. A year ago I deplored with others the breaking up of the United States Employment Service into 50 State and Territorial jurisdictions. We believe that the American people would lose if the Nation-wide integrated system of local employment offices developed during the war was broken up into separate, unrelated employment services. At least the separate State employment services must be required to maintain minimum standards of operating efficiency, must be stimulated to develop progressively better methods of opening doors for workers to jobs, and must facilitate the movement of unemployed workers to jobs even when those jobs are across State lines. This is the issue involved in the present debate over appropriations recommended for the United States Employment Service. JOHN J. CORSON, Arlington.

U. N. And Palestine

By Sumner Welles

Time For Action, Not Delay

WILL THE Assembly of the United Nations assume the full authority conferred upon it by the Charter? Will it now, as the spokesman for world public opinion, boldly recognize its obligation to press for an equitable settlement of the Palestine controversy? Or will it let itself be used by the major nations as a tool in their contest of power politics?

Present prospects are encouraging. They are the more so because of the election of Oswaldo Aranha as president of the Assembly. His ability and character are unquestioned. His lifelong devotion to the principles of human liberty and of human dignity is recognized. No wiser choice could have been made.

The issues are plain. On the one hand it is clear that the restoration of the legitimate rights, and even the salvation of the very lives, of a great number of the most tragically afflicted people in the world today depend upon a decision of the Assembly that a just settlement of the Palestine problem must be found before the end of 1947. On the other hand it is equally clear that Great Britain is determined to continue to rule Palestine, and to oppose any solution which would transform the present Jewish minority into a majority, or provide for the establishment of a Jewish commonwealth. She wants Palestine as a strategic base to replace that which she is losing in Egypt. She wants to retain Arab support. She considers the achievement of these objectives as essential to any successful attempt to check Soviet expansion in the Near East.

GREAT BRITAIN has never shown greater ineptitude, nor a more callous disregard for her obligations to humanity, than in her recent policy in Palestine. Mr. Chamberlain's White Paper of 1939, continued in force by the Attlee cabinet, which practically prohibits Jewish immigration, is a violation of Great Britain's mandate. The persistent refusal of the British government to reopen Palestine's doors has deprived the Jewish survivors of Hitler's mass murders of the hope that they can obtain security and a chance to start life anew.

There need be no extension of the crimes of the Jewish terrorists. But these are primarily a result of British policy and of British military repression. When the British government at last submitted the Palestine problem to the United Nations, it declared that it merely sought an "advisory opinion," to be accepted or rejected as it saw fit. It was later explained that Britain could not undertake new responsibilities in Palestine unless they were acceptable to her. In her present predicament Britain should certainly not be asked to assume obligations she cannot readily carry out. But if the recommendations of the Assembly involve new military or financial burdens, these can surely be jointly shared by several states as provided in Article 106 of the Charter, until the United Nations is able to take them over.

WHAT IS imperative is that the United Nations shall not submit to pressure for further sterile delay. The Assembly cannot afford to appoint a new fact-finding committee to formulate recommendations, only to have these once more ignored or rejected by the British government.

The present session of the Assembly should limit itself to the appointment of a special committee, preferably composed of only a few states, none of them major powers, and all of them devoid of any selfish interest in Palestine. This committee should receive categorical instructions to submit its recommendations for a permanent settlement to the regular session of the Assembly next September. The committee should be instructed to visit Palestine, to familiarize itself at first hand with the condition of the Jewish survivors in Europe, and to hear the views of all of the several interests involved.

The Assembly should agree at this extraordinary session that final action will be taken upon its committee's recommendations at its regular session next autumn.

Regrettable as it may be for several reasons, the only solution which will now be viable for a solution providing for a form of partition which will give the Jews ample territory within which to resettle the survivors of the Nazi massacres, and within which to develop a prosperous economy under an independent and democratic government. The region of Palestine assigned to the Arabs might well be incorporated within Transjordan. The Holy Places should be placed under the control of the Trusteeship Council. Britain's legitimate needs for strategic bases may be properly determined by the Security Council.

IF OUR government has as yet decided upon a Palestine policy, this has not been disclosed. Its backing and filling when responsible representatives of Jewish people asked that their voice be heard at this session of the Assembly was not an exhilarating spectacle. It may be hoped that enlightened American leadership will still be undertaken before it is too late.

If the American Government is chiefly guided in this controversy over Palestine by what are argued to be strategic considerations, and refrains from standing four-square for the principles of human liberty and of justice that are involved, it will lose a great opportunity to enhance its own moral prestige and to increase popular confidence in the authority of the United Nations.

The Gallup Poll

2-Term Presidential Curb Meets Partisan Sentiment

By George Gallup

Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., May 6.—So far 16 States have voted on ratification of the proposed amendment to the United States Constitution providing a two-term limit on future Presidents.

The proposed amendment, one of 130 bills which have in the past sought to limit the presidential terms in office, is the only one to pass both branches of Congress by the necessary two-thirds majority and thus to be sent to the States for ratification.

Fourteen of the 16 States have ratified the amendment. Two have not.

The proposed amendment has solid backing from the American electorate, periodic polls of the Nation have found.

Split on Party Lines
The same polls have also found, however, that thinking on the issue consistently splits fairly sharply along party lines.

This split shows up again in the most recent test of sentiment among voters across the land—Republicans favor the two-term limitation, Democrats oppose it.

"Would you favor amending the Constitution to prevent any President of the United States from serving more than two terms?"

The replies of those with opinions:

Republicans.....79%

No.....31

Democrats.....43%

Yes.....57

This persistent split in thinking along party lines could have interesting implications.

Should sentiment in State Legislatures crystallize along the same partisan lines as that found among the voters, the amendment might possibly be heading for ratification troubles.

There is, of course, no strong reason to believe that this will happen. In the national House of Representatives, 47 Democratic votes were cast in favor of the amendment when it was passed by that body by a two-thirds vote. Takes 36 States

The fact is, though, at least some Democratic-controlled State Legislatures will have to ratify the amendment if it is to become the twenty-second amendment.

This is because it takes 36 States—three-fourths of the 48—to ratify before the proposed amendment becomes a part of the Constitution, and Republicans control both branches of the State Legislatures in only 25 States. Democrats control both branches in 17 States.

For whatever it is worth, the 14 States which have so far ratified have Republican-controlled Legislatures. The two States which have not ratified—Oklahoma and Texas—have Democratic-controlled State Legislatures.

The States which have so far ratified: Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, New Hampshire, Ohio, Oregon, New Jersey, California, Vermont, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania.

Political Line-up
Here is the way the Legislatures now line-up politically in the 48 States:

Republicans control both houses in 25 States: California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Vermont, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Democrats control both houses in 17 States: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia.

In two States, Nevada and Rhode Island, Republicans control the House and Democrats control the Senate.

In one State, Utah, Republicans control the House and Democrats control the Senate.

In one State, Washington, Republicans control the House and the parties hold equal strength in the Senate.

In two States, Minnesota and Nebraska, high executives (governors, lieutenant governors, attorneys general, etc.), are Republicans, but both Legislatures are elected on a nonpartisan basis.

Many Have Adjourned
One other fact. Thirty-nine or so State Legislatures have already adjourned, many of them not to meet again until after the 1948 elections may change political control of some of the Legislatures and thus affect how they would vote on ratification.

President Roosevelt was the only President to break the two-term precedent established when George Washington declined a third term. Roosevelt, of course, ran and won not only a third term, but a fourth term.

Washington Calling

A Captain For The Team

IN SPITE of the threat of a balky House, the Administration is going ahead to try to put together a "team" to carry out the program of aid to Greece and Turkey. This is being done with a full realization of what a very important and difficult job the team will have to do.

Feelers have been put out to several individuals who might captain the team. That, of course, will be the key position. As the White House sees it, however, the program cannot depend on a single individual.

This is why stress is put on the kind of team which will be sent to Athens. The hope is to get first-rate men for each specialized job. Thus, the objective in the field of transportation is to get a top executive who would command in private business not less than $50,000 a year.

This is easier said than done. An illustration is the fate of a tentative move in the direction of a prominent executive who has been considered for the captain's job. Among them, William H. Harrison, a vice president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., was sounded out.

HARRISON SAID he could not afford at this time to consider such an undertaking. He pointed out that he had served, nearly four years in the Army during the war. Recalled to active duty as a colonel in June of 1942, Harrison was a major general a year later and served in the latter years of the war as director of procurement and distribution in the office of the Chief of the Signal Corps. In that capacity he was in every theater of the war, acquiring the kind of experience which, it was felt, equipped him for the Greek-Turkish assignment.

A. T. & T. President Walter S. Clifton said he needed Harrison's services and would not like to release him. That has been the trend ever since the end of the war—out of Government and back into business. It is one of the severe handicaps the Administration labors under in the effort to win the peace.

Sentiment is growing in favor of Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal. Ethridge is serving as the American member of the United Nations commission to investigate Greece's charges of outside intervention in the Greek border dispute. The commission is now in Geneva, Switzerland, struggling to write a report on which at least a majority of the group can agree.

Ethridge is known to be a liberal. At the same time he has had a successful career which has amply demonstrated his capacities. It is believed he could be confirmed by the Senate.

Those who are working to put the team together are well aware of how much turns on its success. Failure might well mean the end of any further effort to use America's economic power in building up the strength of middle and democratic forces. The extremists on the left and right in this country who have opposed the program would say, "I told you so."

FAILURE WOULD also have the most far-reaching political significance. A year from now we would know if the program had bogged down badly. That would come on the eve of a presidential election.

It is just possible that certain statesmen in Capitol Hill may be aware of these political meanings. It is barely possible that this may be the explanation of the stalling tactics in the House. How nearly we can carry out a bipartisan foreign policy under our system of divided powers and fixed elections is becoming more and more of an uncertainty.

We understand here in this country the meaning of our quadrilateral quarrel. We discount some of the talk and some of the behavior. But the rest of the world is not likely to be so charitable, particularly now that we have become the center of such a concentration of economic, industrial and technological power.

We should make the effort more often to see ourselves as others see us. The Greek-Turkish program was proposed on March 13 as an emergency program calling for the quickest possible action. Now, nearly two months later, the final decision is still talked of as though there were a doubt of the outcome.

In his recent press conference, Harold Stassen said some very wise things about the utility of a negative approach in foreign policy and the need for a positive, constructive approach. But how can we get a positive approach with the great divide in Washington, no one has yet said.

'Lockout' by C.&P. Incites Riot, Charges Phone Union in Md.

Baltimore, May 6 (AP).—Mrs. Margaret Wells, president of the Maryland Telephone Traffic Union, said today a Chesapeake and Potomac Co. threat to hire new operators would constitute a lockout and was "an effort to incite riot."

The 4,000 telephone operators headed by Mrs. Wells are not on strike but have been observing the picket lines, which now remain only in Baltimore.

The company, in a letter signed by Norris Showalter, traffic manager, informed the operators it would begin a drive tomorrow to hire as many people as necessary "to furnish satisfactory service to the public."

The letter, said Mrs. Wells, "threatened an old-fashioned lockout which is illegal under the Wagner Act. Such action by the company is an effort to incite riot."

"If the telephone company should carry out this threat, telephone service throughout the State would probably be disrupted, as no telephone operator will work under duress."

"Crossing picket lines has always been against the company's own safety first code."

The only Chesapeake and Potomac Co. Union still on strike represents about 900 clerical workers. The company claims 600 of them have returned voluntarily to work.

Peanuts And The Empire

LONDON.—It is at first surprising to find large numbers of stolid British Labor Party officials talking excitedly about "groundnuts" even after it develops that what they really have in mind is peanuts. It is difficult at first to understand why so much enthusiasm centers on the lowly goober. Yet this widespread fascination with peanuts is one symptom of a momentous change in British policy which has been taking place almost unnoticed. For slowly, ponderously, the whole weight of British imperial policy has been shifting, and there are signs that, a step or two behind, British strategic policy will shift with it.

What has happened is that Africa has been slowly replacing India and the Far East as the focal point of the British Empire. Moreover, an attempt is being made to export the limited British version of socialism to the British possessions in Africa. Any good doctrinaire Socialist knows that socialism and imperialism are mutually contradictory terms. Yet British history is a history of somehow making inherent contradictions work. From the tentative beginnings now under way, of which the "groundnut scheme" for East Africa is the most ambitious, something new under the sun—a Socialist empire—may yet emerge.

The groundnut scheme will be an attempt to apply the principle of the TVA (an experiment which has had a profound effect on British Socialist thought) to East Africa, with peanuts substituted for electric power. An initial outlay of about 25 million pounds will be used to establish a corporation for the production of peanuts on a grand scale. Any products will be plowed back into further developments. Thus it is hoped first, to raise the miserable standard of living of the East African natives. It is hoped second, and by no means incidentally, to correct the most serious deficit in the present English diet—the shortage of fats and oils—to which some dietitians attribute the low rate of production in British industry. In this way it is planned to eat the Socialist cake and keep the benefits of empire too.

THE GROUNDNUT scheme is only the most expensive of a number of similar schemes, all centering on Africa. Mineral deposits are to be nationalized, the pattern of the British nationalization of coal. In the Cameroons, a TVA-like project for the cultivation of former German lands has already been started. Nigeria's electric power is to be nationalized. In West Africa, a plan is being formulated for government control and marketing of cocoa.

The economic importance of East Africa especially has been vastly increased by the discovery of important zinc and lead deposits, and in Uganda, of the richest diamond mines in the world. (So rich are these mines, indeed, that production must be very carefully controlled, otherwise "diamonds would sell for two a penny.") Plans are on foot for the building of new railways in this area, and the opening of this new port facilities.

This shift of emphasis, this new imperial focus has, of course, its strategic and military implications. For generations the young men at Sandhurst have had it drummed into their skulls that British strategy in the Mediterranean and the Middle East is designed to guard the "lifeline of empire." The life line, of course, through Gibraltar and Suez and the Far East. Now two new factors are tending to undermine this first commandment in British strategic thinking. First, the lifeline was closed during most of the recent war, and the development of the long-range plane and the new weapons have made it exceedingly unlikely that it would be held open in case of another. Second, there will soon be little or no empire in the Far East for the lifeline to lead to.

THESE NEW factors have led to a disagreement (in less dignified circles it would be called a row) now in progress among the makers of British strategic policy. The sides are almost exactly divided according to age. The older admirals and generals still think primarily in terms of British communications with the Far East. Hence they emphasize the need for strong positions—in Palestine, Cyprus, Egypt and elsewhere—for the protection of the Suez Canal.

The younger men believe that the canal would be closed on the first day of hostilities, and that the strategic objective must therefore be, not to keep it open, but to prevent its use by a potential enemy. They thus lay the main strategic emphasis on two points: East Africa, to be developed both as the paying proposition in the new empire, and as a main strategic base; and Middle East oil, which the main African base would be designed to protect. For this purpose, it is believed that control of the Arabian Peninsula in case of war, and total control of the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean, will be necessary. There is also some belief that a main forward base at Basra, in Iraq, is essential.

Two facts are of interest in this strategic assessment. First, the only potential enemy which the plan envisages is the Soviet Union. The younger school of British strategists inclines to the belief that Russian logistic difficulties in case of a thrust south would be so great that given overwhelming air superiority to balance against the massive Russian manpower, the Russians could be contained and the essential positions saved. Second, it is obviously a basic assumption that the world commitments of the United States, and more especially the American commitments in the Near and Middle East, are such that in case of a Russian attack south, the United States and Great Britain would inevitably be partners in the war which would immediately ensue.

Camden Newspapers Resume Next Week
Camden, N. J., May 6 (AP).—The Camden Courier-Post newspapers, which suspended last January 31, will resume publication next week. Publisher Harold A. Stretch announced today.

Stretch, who headed a group which recently purchased the papers from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, said the Evening Courier will appear Wednesday, May 14, and the Morning Post the next day.

Caracas Paper Wants U. S. Envoy Recalled
Caracas, Venezuela, May 6 (AP).—Recall of United States Ambassador Frank P. Corrigan was demanded today by the leftist evening newspaper Sucesos because of a photograph showing the Ambassador and former Venezuelan President Eleazar Lopez Contreras, allegedly taken when Corrigan arrived in the United States a few days ago on leave.

The leftist press has consistently charged Lopez Contreras with plotting the overthrow of the present revolutionary regime.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Federal Loyalty Order May Be Clarified

LOYALTY: Clark Clifford, the White House legal adviser, is working on the Federal employee loyalty program. And there's a broad hint that the loyalty order will be changed to clear up its muddy points.

Several passages of the order have been criticized as "ambiguous."

One provision is the jurisdiction of the FBI and the Civil Service Commission which is especially hazy. Another is the authority given the Attorney General to list organizations as "subversive."

On this point, there is a demand that a board, of which the Attorney General would be a member, be created to list such groups. And there's reason to believe that Attorney General Tom C. Clark wouldn't object to such a change.

Also, a clear provision that the list of "subversive" groups is to be made public. Strangely enough, there is undercover opposition to making the lists public. Furthermore, there is a move on to have rewritten a provision stating in simple and forceful words that membership in a subversive group only indicates disloyalty, and that it doesn't necessarily mean the employee member is to be fired from Government. Membership would depend on the employee and the circumstances. In other words, each case would be decided on its merits.

INTERIOR: The economy drive probably will result in the closing of its dispensary. Hundreds of interior employees are treated in it annually. The dispensary has only three employees.

LABOR: Budget increases made by the Senate would add about 1000 jobs in the Labor Department proper. However, the increase would be offset by reductions in the State Department.

AGRICULTURE: It's reported on Capitol Hill that a cut of between 25 and 30 per cent will be recommended in the Agriculture budget by the House Appropriations Committee. The Department already has considerably fewer employees than it had before the war.

COMMERCE: Steps already widespread have been taken to prevent widespread firings as threatened by the $5-million-dollar cut made by the House Appropriations Committee in its budget. Officials estimate the cut would wipe out about 2000 jobs—but they hope by June 30 that the bulk of these jobs will be vacant.

Anticipating cuts, the Department stopped hiring several weeks ago. Its officials now believe that turnover will offset most of the reductions in personnel.

WAR: If either the Senate or the House Civil Service Committee would really dig, it could come up with some amazing stories on the effect of the Royal program for civilian personnel, and the confusion, morale-breaking and backstabbing it has brought about. Here are a few tips:

Senator Williams (R., Del.), the only committee member to vote against the bill, was on his feet and apparently he, too, was ready to object. Chairman Langer said he would call up the bill again within a few days.

Received a letter from Bob Massey, clocker and priermaker, who used to operate around Maryland. He is at the New York tracks and has invented an aerial car to operate around the inside of the track. The judges and stewards can ride in the car and have a closeup of the race from start to finish. Why not make it big, too? I was talking to Fred Burton, racing secretary, at Charles Town. He has the book for the meeting ready and in the hands of the printer. Jockey Danny W. Sooca will ride at the West Virginia track for C. E. Crider, with Pop Almutt having second call on him. Fred Colwell, former amateur steeplechaser, has joined the staff of the Racing Secretary Gilbert Haus at Delaware Park. The horsemen will stage their benefit dinner tonight at the Lord Baltimore Hotel in Baltimore. Excellent chance for a big evening as well as an opportunity to help the worthy cancer and infantile paralysis funds. I have seen several bets made that Phalanx will be the favorite over Jet Pilot in the stakes Saturday despite the fact the Maryland classic is a sixteenth of a mile shorter than the Derby.

Stymie, Polyesian to Miss Dixie Handicap at Pimlico

Top Rating Official Pimlico Charts To Assault On Friday

Pimlico, Md., May 6.—Friday's $30,000 Dixie Handicap, over the mile and three sixteenths distance, took on a new complexion today when it was learned that Mrs. Ethel D. Jacobs' Stymie and Mrs. P. A. B. Widener's Polyesian would remain in New York, passing up the Dixie.

According to word received by Racing Secretary Charles J. McLennan, Trainer Hirsch Jacobs said the race which Stymie ran in the Grey Lag last Saturday took too much out of him and he was not prepared to meet the competition he'd be called upon to face in the Dixie.

Polyesian finished third in the Toboggan Handicap at Belmont yesterday and Trainer Morris Dixon decided against asking him to go the Dixie route soon after a sprint effort.

Removal of this pair from the probable starting field in the Dixie leaves King Ranch's Assault as the No. 1 man in the Dixie, but he will not want for opposition despite the failure of Stymie and Polyesian to all their engagements.

McLennan rates at least eight horses as likely rivals of Assault in the Dixie and the field may be 10, since Flash Burn is expected to be a running mate of the King Ranch star Friday. Flash Burn won the Gittings Handicap here on Saturday.

Two South American thoroughbreds, Arnold Hanger's Rico Monte and R. N. Ryan's Talon, are in the lineup. Shamrock Stable is expected to run Westminster, while K. A. O'Connor's Statesman, second in the Gittings, also is regarded as a certain starter.

Wagering Off Post Consensus At Pimlico

Baltimore, May 6 (U.P.)—Maryland race fans, in common with horse followers across the Nation, haven't been putting as much heavy sugar on their favorite hay burners, a survey showed today.

Pari-mutuel betting at Pimlico during the first six days of the spring meeting now under way at Old Hilltop shows a 6.5 per cent decline from the first six days last spring.

Edward G. Shipley, auditor for the Maryland Racing Commission, reported spring meet betting at Bowie and Havre de Grace was down 8.99 and 8.22 per cent respectively.

Pimlico had 98,701 customers its first six days last week, compared with 96,187 for the same days last spring. Wagering averaged $1,039.67 a day, or $72,713 a day less than last year.

Montgomery Blair

Montgomery Blair High School triumphed yesterday on the home field, defeating Gaithersburg 4-1, on the strength of a tight pitching performance by Rick Scott. It was Blair, Bill Hosselbarth's homer in the second with a mate on supplied the score by innings:

Blair 4, Gaithersburg 1.

THE DISTRICT LINE

STREET SCENE

The telephone strike is pretty grim stuff for those directly affected, yet I can't help but smile when I see the gal pickets parading up and down—popping their bubble gum.

ON BEING A LADY

With thousands of other Catholic children, Josephine attended "Prayer Day for World Peace" ceremonies on the Monument grounds on May Day.

When it was all over, there was a good deal of milling about as the children started for home. Josephine was running for her bus when she bumped into the other little girl.

After Josephine was aboard the bus, and somewhat more composed, she reviewed what happened. The other little girl's glasses had been knocked off and broken in the collision.

"Golly," she thought. "And I didn't even stop to get her name or anything."

So Josephine, who's 12, says to the other little girl (whose age she estimates at 9):

"I'm sorry I broke your glasses, and if you will identify yourself to the man who conducts The District Line, my Daddy will pay for fixing them."

LUDLOW TIP

Mary H. Johnson of 623½ L st. se., has a tip for David Jernigan and all other subscribers who have occasion to dial the Ludlow exchange.

Mary suggests you pause for a few seconds after you dial the "LU" and then dial the rest of your number. If you do that, you get your number much quicker for some reason.

If you know the reason, please don't try to explain it to me. You'll only confuse me.

TAXI RECORDS

A recent item here mentioned a cab that been driven more than a half million miles. I asked whether any local hacker could beat that record, and expected to get several claims of higher mileage.

But not a single District cab driver lays claim to any more than 500,000 miles—and yet I have gotten the following note from Pvt. D. B. of Ward 14B, Walter Reed Hospital:

"In New York City during the war, a half-million miles was the rule, and not the exception. And many of those hacks are still running."

spade, club, club ruff and two diamonds.

At the second table, therefore, West could have topped the opponents' ninety points by leaving his partner in two diamonds, doubled, but his redoubled changed all that.

Against four hearts, doubled, West opened the diamond nine, dummy's queen forced East's ace and South trumped. He played the ace of clubs and ruffed a club on the board, discarding his losing spade. He led to the ace of spades and ruffed a second club, which East was unable to overruff.

Next declarer trumped a spade in the closed hand, ruffed another club on the board, dropping West's king, and returned to his hand by trumping a spade. Now South led a club, and West, having only trumps left, was forced to ruff. He then had to lead away from his ace of hearts, giving South the king for his tenth trick.

Declarer made four hearts, doubled, losing three heart tricks to West.

Don't be surprised if the penguins at the Zoo develop Harvard accents in the next few days.

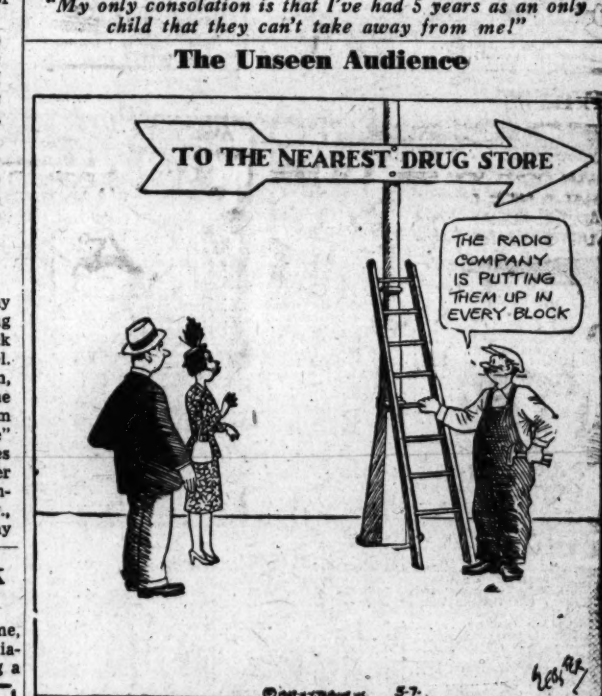

The Harvards are having lunch at the Zoo, Saturday, and then Dr. Mann will take them on a tour of the establishment.

Ordinarily, Harvard men have no truck with the lower animals except on those occasions when they encounter graduates of Yale and Princeton.

Life's LITTLE DRAMAS

as told to BART HODGES

PAUL WHITEMAN

"King of Jazz"

My orchestra was the first jazz outfit to make a concert tour of the country. We played before audiences accustomed to noted singers like John McCormack or Enrico Caruso.

Our featured singer Morton Downey, was a crackpot tenor. But he was no fool; up for opera stars. I decided to put him in the orchestra. Critical audiences would be won over by a young musician who, as an extra chore, sang so splendidly.

There was just one hitch. Morton didn't know a note of music. However, he sat in the brass section clutching a French horn, never blowing, but giving every pretense of turning out beautiful melodies.

But in time temptation triumphed. Morton tooted his horn. The off-key blast threw the brass section into mild confusion.

As time went on Morton blew louder and more often. The boys put water in his horn—then four, then syrup. They stuffed it with rags and paper. But it seemed nothing could stop Morton.

One night during "Wang Wang Blues" he worked himself up to a frenzy. Unable to hold back longer, he blew. There was only a swish. The answer had been found at last!

Someone had soldered the mouthpiece.

HERE is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It is a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Is $2,500,000 Too Much for Nation to Spend In Building Defense Against Mental Illness, Which Today Is Epidemic in United States?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: You have been writing for years with great success to help people who are suffering from mental or nervous problems. Mental health includes all the things you write about and the more disturbed cases which are found in our public institutions.

As you know, the national budget has recommended that $2,500,000 be appropriated for research and training in mental health. Now the House of Representatives of the United States Congress has voted to reduce this appropriation to $1,400,000.

Do you think $2,500,000 would be too much for the United States Government to spend on research and training in mental health? Very truly yours, G. B.

Ounce of Prevention Worth Pound of Cure

DEAR G. B.: As an average woman, I am embarrassed by any question having to do with figures. However, if an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure—a truism honored by prudent men—then surely it were "penny wise, pound foolish" economy to cut in half the budget proposal mentioned.

It is common knowledge today that mental illness is epidemic in our society. Statistics show 163,556 new patients admitted to custodial hospitals in 1940; and last year the number had risen to 250,000 mental casualties per annum shut away.

At present, more than half the hospital beds in the Nation are occupied by mental patients—and the ominous tide moves stealthily higher. In contrast, there are fewer than 4000 qualified psychiatrists—and a comparable shortage of psychiatric social workers, nurses, hospital attendants, etc.—to cope with this increasing case load.

Consequently, the majority of these unfortunates fail to recover. They languish year after year in their nightmare world, into which they drifted for lack of preventive treatment in the first place. And they represent a "total loss" cost to the Nation, currently of between three and four billion dollars per annum.

Cost of Neglect Is Billions Yearly

THIS ESTIMATE—given me by the United States Public Health Service—includes the two items of (1) annual cost of patients' maintenance, and (2) annual loss of patients' earning power, figured on the basis of their earning record prior to hospitalization.

Thus, strictly from the viewpoint of thrifty national housekeeping—to say nothing of humane considerations—a starting fund of $2,500,000 to clean up a situation that is costing us billions annually, as the price of neglect, would appeal to me as a sterling investment.

Indeed, weighing the fact that the purpose of this fund is to (1) accelerate intensive research into the causes of mental illness, (2) expand facilities for thoroughly training greater numbers of mental therapists and (3) construct in Washington a hospital to serve the Nation as a model in mending broken minds—weighing all this, I think even the budget request is as frugal. And I venture to hope that on second thought our legislators will vote the "ounce" measure through intact. M. H.

Delightful Dinners, Luncheon

By Eva Hinton

SO MANY friends came to Washington for the Gold Cup weekend! The weather threatened to let them down, but then smiled at them instead. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton were down from New York to visit Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss. Mrs. Edward Reed had pretty Mrs. Bonomi staying with her. The popular "Sherry" Davies opened their house in Georgetown and will stay two months. Wesley Frame and his chic wife came from their plantation in South Carolina. The Albert Dewees returned to their house in Georgetown, and two Washington "lovelies," Pat Baker and Maury Thomas who are living in New York, remembered the old home town!

The 1925 F. St. Club had a busy weekend beginning with Friday evening when Jack Logan and several others gave dinner parties before the supper club's "bonus" dance. At Mr. Logan's dinner, Bill MacCracken was telling of meeting a certain well-known news gal early one morning in the elevator of the National Press Building.

"How are you?" the impeccable Mr. MacCracken greeted her politely. "I'm MAD," responded the lady fiercely. "I'm mad with my MOTHER!" "That's too bad," soothed Mr. MacCracken, thinking of Mother's Day creeping up and everything. "Why are you mad with your mother?"

"I'm mad because I've just discovered another one of the lies that parents tell their children! She told me that when I got older I wouldn't need so much SLEEP!"

AT LUNCH TIME on Saturday, several groups found it cosier at the F. St. Club than on Warrenton's showery Gold Cup hillside. Several guests spoke of having drawn horses in informal derby hat-pools. One lady remarked that it would do her little good to win, as the pool from which she drew was so small it was scarcely a "puddle."

On Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Auchincloss gave a delightful buffet luncheon on the terrace at Merrywood. The view across masses of dogwood to the river was superb.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Judson Hulse, wore a gown of candlelight satin, edged in seed pearls and rhinestones and a veil of heirloom Brussels lace held by a coronet of seed pearls and rhinestones. Her flowers were white orchids and a cascade of lilies of the valley and white rosebuds.
